MRS STOWE'S GREAT WORK.

Though Her Last Days Are Dark,
She Has Achieved Much

It may be that Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe will live for some time, though she is approaching her eighty-second birthday, but her mind is irretrievably gone. Mrs. Stowe's life has been most eventful, and seems to have partaken at once of the gloom and grandeur of the epoch in which the best of her work was done, the period immediately preceding the civil war. She has shown since her earliest childhood "the genius of goodness," as George Sand had said of her, "not that of the man of letters, but of the saint, pure, penetrating and profound, the spirit that fathoms the recesses of the human soul." When she was but a child of 12 she chose for a school composition this profound theme: "Can the Immortality of the Soul Be Proved From the Light of Nature?" and her father, Dr. Lyman Beecher, was astonished at the strength and wisdom of her arguments in the negative. Perhaps her great brain is paying the penalty for these juvenile tours de force now. It was the influence of her father, who was a great abolitionist, which turned even her childish thoughts toward the iniquities of slavery. Her progress at school was astonishingly rapid. At 14 she was teaching a class in "Butler's Analogy" and could read Latin, Greek, French and Italian with ease. Her practical acquaintance with southern life began after she had married Professor Stowe, and she then made a careful study of slavery, while living with him in Cincinnati. When she returned to New England a few years later she found that many good people were not in favor of abolition because they did not know what slavery really meant. So she resolved to teach them, and wrote "Uncle Tom's Cabin." It did not make much stir when it was first published in a newspaper in 1851, but soon its fame began to spread. In book form it made a still greater sensation. Half a million copies were sold of it in five years from its writing in America alone. Millions of copies have been sold since, and it has been translated into nearly every known language. She has written a score of other important books, but none has approached "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in popularity, although such a competent critic as James Russell Lowell thought her fame would rest eventually upon "The Minister's Wooing." She has written but little since 1869, when she published the defense of Lady Byron, which at that time created such a sensation. Her health has been failing since 1888, and her mind has deteriorated faster than her body.

RUMORS OF REVOLUTION.

Police Kept on the Alert by Secret Service Reports.

Within the past two weeks reports have been received at headquarters from the numerous spies and specials that another revolution was imminent. This was the cause of the dispatching of the police expedition to Pearl harbor and Waianae the other night, only to find out it was a wildgoose chase. Notwithstanding this fruitless mission, reports of a similar nature have since been flying around.

Of late Senior Captain Parker has decided to keep the detectives away from the Marshal's office of nights, only allowing them to be about the Station during the day. Early yesterday the police patrolling about the Station were armed with pistols and pouches of cartridges.

It is prepared by modern methods, possesses the greatest curative powers, and has the most wonderful record of actual cures of any medicine in existence. Take only Hood's.

Hood's Pills are purely vegetable, and do not purge, pain or gripe. 25c.
